Learning outcomes: This course is about the history of social thought, or the reflections of various people at various times and in a variety of contexts on the nature and structure of human social life. The examination of the history of social thought is not a visit to the skeleton closet of ideas, however. It is, rather, a very contemporary pursuit, reflecting contemporary ideologies, evidence, and social conditions. Thus, our investigation proceeds on two levels: what people have thought historically, and what we now think about what they thought. This is an inside/outside proposition as well – i.e., we will use the concepts developed historically to critique that history, even as we learn it.

VALUE ADDED COURSES

Course Code: SSS 101

Course Name: Environmental Sociology

Credits Equivalent: 4 Credits

Learning Outcomes:- The course "Environmental Sociology" aims to provide the students with a comprehensive conceptual, theoretical and empirical background to the interaction between social and natural world, by way of highlighting issues related to environment, sustainable development and resource governance. Human societies throughout history have shared an intrinsic relation with nature. Environmental factors always shape social phenomena, and human societies inevitably alter natural environment. In this broader context, this course aims to explore the relationship between human society and the larger natural environment, of which it is a part of. It is now acknowledged that environmental issues are inevitably social issues, and these can be understood by an examination of their social roots.
