Engaged Governance and Women Empowerment in India : Future Prospects

The present book contains papers and case studies presented by various academicians in the University Grants Commission's (UGC) sponsored National Seminar on Engaged Governance and Women Empowerment in India, Policy Prospects, held on 17-18 December, 2016 at SV Govt. College, Chittoor, Andhra Pradesh. The focus of the book is on engaged governance and empowerment of women in India. In fact, the concept of engaged governance has been gaining momentum globally in recent times, both in academic discourse and public practice, as ever the world, it calls for more directly to the decision-making processes of a task to enhance that does not by pass the institutions of representative democracy but empowers it. "Using a new 'emerged as an off-shoot strategy for improving women's status. Women Empowerment is a process of developing ability of political, economic, socially, cultural and so forth, make the women and women (the beyond gender) feel self-reliance, determination and capabilities of them. It brings about equilibrium between in social, economic and political spheres in which they can play an active role in go with men. For academic, women have been one of the significant phenomenon of the 21st century, and a more social status is compared to men. This self-reliance determination and capabilities of women has created the need for empowerment of women. In spite of constitutional provisions, enactment of laws, initiatives of social reforms, efforts by the government through different schemes and programmes and UJALA, etc., the social status of women in India is not as advanced as the developed countries. The 75 years of Independence, India, has had a not only work in the academic discourse but also a catalyst for the further growth and academic recognition in the deep field.
